In 1951 an old stone fortress on the Island of Murter, near Sibenek, was modernized and reinforced with concrete. The fort named "Raduc", on a hill of the same name, was armed with two 42 millimeter anti-aircraft guns and two machine guns, each with four barrels (sic). Also contained in the fortress were a naval observatory and a unit referred to as "special", by the populace. The naval observatory was manned by twelve to fifteen sailors and had a radio transmitting station, heliograph, photoelectric equipment, and all means for signal communication. The group referred to as "special" has occupied the fortress since the autumn of 1954. This unit is commanded by a non-commissioned officer and is believed to be operating a radar station.
